Everyone welcome!

Student Conference Workshops

These workshops are designed to introduce advanced Bachelor's and Master's students of American Studies and English to the conventions of composing and presenting conference papers.

While the workshops are part of the CS VI: American Studies course "Human Enhancement: Ethics, Life Sciences, and the Human Body in Film," in which students will present their own research project at a public conference, everyone is welcome to join the class for one or both of these sessions. Students joining the workshops do not have to engage with the course topic of human enhancement or participate in the conference.

No need to register. Just bring an idea for or an excerpt of a paper to work with.

Writing a Conference Paper

In this workshop we will address the particularities of writing an academic research paper for a conference. We will practice how to write in a way that your message remains clear to an audience who does not read your paper but listens to you presenting it.

Please bring an existing idea or draft of a paper that you would like to work with throughout this workshop.

Presenting/Asking Questions at a Conference

In this workshop we will practice presentation techniques for different styles of conference presentations. Further, we will discuss different forms of questions and discussion points you can ask/contribute in response to a conference presentation.

Please bring a short text segment you would like to practice with.
